

SNZ #CLASSIFIEDS

Zhou Tonged please come back!

Bitcoiner
Christmas at SATOSH.EE!

SATOSH.EE/
CHRISTMAS

you can build something real instead of playing
Fiat/Financialized games

#1354290

SNZ #CLASSIFIEDS

928 516

$86130

STACKER NEWS
SNZ
STACKER NEWS

STACKER NEWS

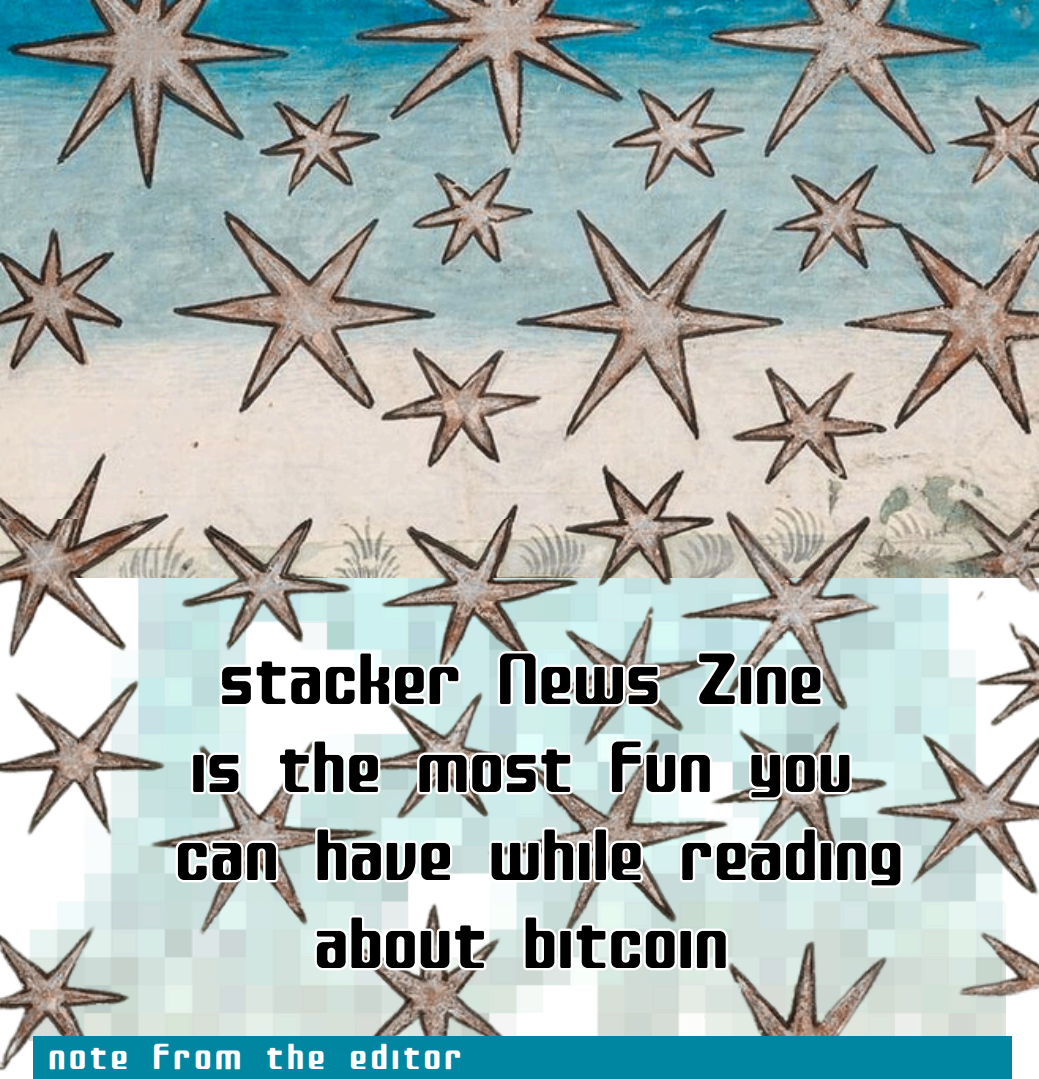

STACKER NEWS

STACKER NEWS

STACKER NEWS

Issue #38

Dec 12 - Dec 18

stacker News Zine is the most fun you can have while reading about bitcoin

note From the editor

It's the most wonderful time to HODL

This morning I procured coffee for myself, as I do each day. However, today I had the brilliant idea to test what happens if I doubled my dose - a quad shot of espresso in my cafe au lait. Friends, with discretion, I share the results: jitters and shits. But in positive effect, I am whizzing through the final items on my to-do. And soon,

I'll be home for Christmas created by @plebpoet

supported by @k00b

top boost

WAGMI Holiday Gift Basket - An All-Bitcoin & All- Nostr Gift Set

1758 sats \ 20k boost \ 15 comments \ @lowtimer 12 Dec AGORA

Better money encourages better products.

We have the best money. Guess who makes the best products?

I've put together a gift basket that includes 12 items made by merchants who are all-Bitcoin and all-Nostr.

Because they insist on convincing hodlers to give up sats in exchange for their products, their products must be worthy, right?

Indeed they are. No seed oils, toxic additives, fillers, or other junk. Better packaging. Better production techniques. No compromises to eek out pennies in profit at the expense of the consumer. No fiat games. Just straight quality that you can be proud to gift. Or keep for yourself!

Bought individually, you'd spend over $70 in shipping alone for these 12 items, so if you were ever curious about trying any of these items, it's a great deal too.

Order by Sunday 12/14 for delivery before Christmas.

top post

FROSTR - Now available on Umbrel with Igloo Server

5358 sats \ 9 comments \ @bitcoinplebdev 12 Dec nostr

So excited to announce latest release of igloo-server now packaged for umbrel!

Simply click on the ... in the top right of app store and add "<https://github.com/frostr-org/igloo-server-store>" as the url and it will be available to install and run immediately!

Frostr is still in the process of building out our apps & libraries in order to deliver a full robust suite of signers that average nostr users can leverage, but this is a major step forward in that dream.

Give it a try and let me know any questions / feedback you have.
Onwards!

igloo-server is a signer for a single key called "share"

comments

100 sats \ 2 replies \ @jasonb 12 Dec
Installing now!

60 sats \ 1 reply \ @bitcoinplebdev OP 12 Dec
LFG please tell me if it sucks!

21 sats \ 0 replies \ @jasonb 12 Dec
👍 On it!

90 sats \ 0 replies \ @cascd 17 Dec
Congrats gents looking forward to playing with it and exploring novel use cases.

What other rabbit holes have you fallen into?

3295 sats \ 58 comments \ @jasonb 13 Dec
BooksAndArticles

top post

So most of us are half way (or less) down the Bitcoin rabbit hole. Here's a pic of another rabbit hole I occasionally fall into.

What about you? What's a subject you find yourself coming back to learn more about just when you thought you were becoming knowledgeable?

comments

202 sats \ 6 replies \ @optimism 13 Dec

Thanks to Bitcoiners copying the gold bug "sound money" narrative, I've fallen into the rabbit hole of trying to find out what exactly went on prior to 1971, basically: how did the gold standard fail. Because it did fail. But what really happened. What were the triggers in practice. And how can we detect such scenarios in a digital world? It goes very slow because I'm digging up memoirs from politicians in the 60s. Some are awesome because they had great correspondence on the topic. Others have been a waste of my time. But maybe, just maybe, can it help. Because thinking that there will be a bitcoin standard (which I personally don't think likely) and then there will be that forever, would probably be wishful thinking.

171 sats \ 16 replies \ @Scoresby 13 Dec

I fell hard down the arctic exploration rabbit hole. At first it was just the adventure stories, people surviving in insane circumstances, but then a love of the ice and the way it makes our natural world so alien, and then finally admiration of the freedom comes with the arctic regions: no one is there to tell you what to do.

top post

Canoeing to the source of the Hurunui River. New Zealand Backcountry Journeys.

2077 sats \ 4 comments \ @Solomonsatoshi 17 Dec Travel

Since acquiring a 2002 Hiace van earlier this year I have been going on some road trips to various back country locations here in the South Island New Zealand.

On the very first such trip I went to the mouth of the Hurunui River and explored the beach and area around the river mouth- #1197914 That was near mid winter and more recently in Spring I decided to explore the upper reaches of the Hurunui where is fed by and flows through several high country lakes.

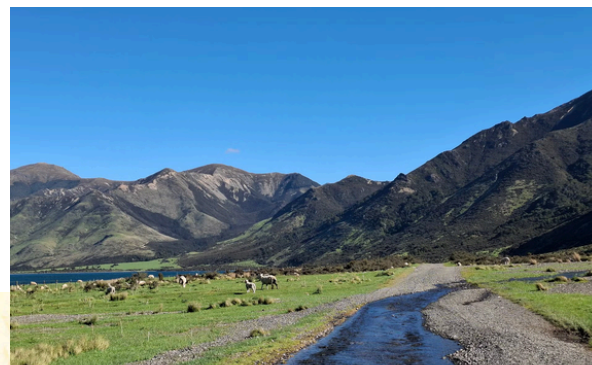

The main Lake is Lake Sumner and nearby are Lake Taylor and Lake Katrine.

Driving inland from the township of Hawarden the road turns to gravel and as we drive up it I was thinking this road is rather rutted and rough, but halfway up we encountered a grader working the surface and from there on it was a lot smoother. There was not a lot of traffic on the road but during holidays I suspect it gets quite busy. The road is ok until you get to the first lake- Lake Taylor and there is a DOC campsite there where you can camp beside the lake. But I wanted to see if the van could negotiate the road on further up to Lake Katrine- from Lake Taylor the Lake Katrine the road is described as 4wd only- but the van has good ground clearance and the weather was dry so we took our chances and continued on up the last 8 km to reach Lake Katrine which also has a campsite- but this campsite is free. Further to the free campsite I was attracted by the possibility to take my old Canadian canoe across Lake Katrine and via a canal up into the main Lake Lake, Lake Sumner.

We made it to Lake Katrine but I would not recommend it in an ordinary car or in wet weather- you could easily get stuck, or worse.

On arriving at Lake Katrine we set up camp and had a look around. There are multiple illegal huts built there on government conservation land by fishermen and boaties. The government wants to pull them down but so far they remain. Probably the cost of removing and the relative inaccessibility of the site protects them a bit.

There are lots of camping areas near the lake and you want to choose one with some shelter from the wind and sun if you can. The wind can be cold and constant. When the wind is not blowing the sandflies come out to feed- on you.

A relatively good section of the 4wd track from Lake Taylor to Lake Katrine. Lake Taylor on the background.

Next morning it was time to try to navigate across lake Katrine and through the canal that connects it to Lake Sumner. All went well and we found the canal entrance although it is not easy to see until you get fairly close to it. The canal is narrow- maybe 5 metres at most wide but enough for most small boats to pass.

Once we got through the canal and onto Lake Sumner I headed west up the lake to where the Hurunui River enters the lake- wondering if it might be possible to go up the river in the canoe. Its maybe 2 km from the canal to the river.

The canoe has an old Evinrude 2 hp outboard which makes travel easier than paddling- once you get the stubborn motor start... On reaching the river where it feeds into Lake Sumner it looked too shallow and swift for the motor and the boat to enter so I headed toward the shore of the Lake to go ashore for a rest and to have a look around.

The canoe has arrived at the head of Lake Sumner - photo looking north toward where the Hurunui river enters the lake. There were a surprising number of people around this area- some trampers and some fishermen trying for trout. The track from Lake Sumner to the Taramakau river is part of the Te Araroa trail that goes one end of New Zealand to the other.

If you continue up river from Lake Sumner there are a series of DOC huts, some built in the 1930s and quite historic being some the the first government built public tramping huts and the track that links them eventually takes you over Harpers pass to the headwaters of the Taramakau river which flows down to the west coast.

This route was taken by Maori seeking greenstone on the West Coast and also early European Settlers. In the 1870s the provincial government invest 3000 pounds in developing the road but it was super-ceded by the Lewis and Arthurs pass routes which today are the main highways to the west coast from Canterbury. Since then the road that once was over Harpers Pass has reverted to a walking track on most of the route from Lake Sumner to the Taramakau.

Having got to the top of Lake Sumner was enough for this first trip into the Lake Sumner Park- maybe next time I can go further and walk over the ancient Maori Greenstone trading route?

Anyway the canoe trip back to Lake Katrine was ok and the next morning we drove back through the 4wd track to Lake Taylor - made it but it was pushing the limits of the old van and there were a few times that rock and Hiace underbelly met.

Spent one night camping at Lake Taylor- a cold westerly wind blowing across the lake onto the camping ground similar to at Lake Katrine but there is less shelter available at Lake Taylor.
Just some flax.

164 sats \ 1 reply \ @Scoresby 17 Dec

This sounds like a great tour around. I'm quite envious. Many of the pictures are without trees. But across the lake it looked quite forested. What are the forests like around there? And can you get up above the treeline via the track, or is it a hike?

I'd dearly love to spend some time walking around there. Someday.

408 sats \ 0 replies \ @Solomonsatoshi OP 17 Dec

A lot of the land/forest up there used to be burned off periodically right up as far as the treeline to enable sheep and cattle grazing...

43 sats \ 1 reply \ @Signal312 18 Dec

How do you have the van set up, inside? Comfy?

0 sats \ 0 replies \ @Solomonsatoshi OP 18 Dec

Very basic so far- it came with a very comfy built in bed which takes up 70% of the carry space but has a 1 foot high space below it for storage. Carry a gas cooker, 20 litre water container, foldout camping chairs, small fold out table and a 8'x10' tarpaulin that creates a dry covered space and shade off one side.

Sitting here at Steak n Shake eating fries. What's the problem with Bitcoin now?

3240 sats \ 28 comments \ @anon 17 Dec bitcoin

I mostly look at Stacker News for my 'Bitcoin news' because it's so awesome and uses Lightning. But every once in a while I check out 'Bitcoin Twitter' and...

What on heck is going on over there?

I literally just bought a milkshake, using Lightning, with my own node. Non-custodial. Instant. Almost no fee. There are tons of Lightning wallets, some more advanced, some simpler some custodial some not...

But they actually work. It's pretty easy to take a UTXO, move it to a Lightning app on your phone open a channel with it and have access to a big Lightning network just from your phone. Send money anywhere, almost instantly for almost no cost.

You can swap in and out on-chain for a very low cost, swap on or off-chain non-kyc basically at any time... send a UTXO using various platforms and get 'sats' to your Lightning channel or ecash wallet almost instantly. Way more private, swap in swap out spend etc so on and so forth.

There's robosats which only requires TOR browser allowing you to buy non-kyc directly to your Lightning channel.

5 years ago none of this technology existed, the swaps the ecash the ability to go to Steak n Shake... none of it even Robosats (to the best of my knowledge) didn't exist 5 years ago.

I don't pretend that this technology will withstand NSA scrutiny but it's a huge improvement on Bitcoin privacy while maintaining the L1 transparency that's so important, and it actually scales albeit with some growing pains because it's new.

I don't even know what to think of Bitcoin Twitter. Are they all bots? Or just losers? Do these people actually use Bitcoin? Do they just not have any?

I know for a fact that above 2-3 sats/vbyte the vast majority of arbitrary data is outbid and that's from watching my own fucking Core node without filters so what's the point?

I refuse to believe that the vast majority of "voices" on Twitter are actual people, because for all the times they talk about "Bitcoin the Money" apparently they don't actually use it? If the filter (now confiscation people???) actually used Bitcoin as much as they bitch about spam and filters we wouldn't have such anemic on-chain demand, demand would be healthy we would have real merchant adoption and a fee-market.

If spam is outbid 95% at like 2-3 sats/vbyte which it is then what the hell is the problem? With all the people in the world outbidding spam, it should be absolutely trivial and the infrastructure has gotten so much better it's easier to use.

I refuse to believe that "bitcoin twitter" is composed of real people, as opposed to mostly bots or just losers. It reminds me of the screaming kids and morons on Call of Duty but that was 15 years ago the 'adults' I thought had moved on.

Eating my fries, having a drink I bought with Lightning is FUCKING AWESOME I look at the 'filter' and 'UTXO-debate' with astonishment.

What is the 'problem' with Bitcoin now?

lightning works!

Meme Monday - Best Bitcoin Meme Gets 5,000 CCs

558 sats \ 25 comments \ @sn 15 Dec memes

MEME OF THE WEEK

5149 sats \ 1 reply \ @TotallyHumanWriter 15 Dec

The True and Accurate History of HODL

13k sats \ 15 comments \ @Scoresby 18 Dec bitcoin

The legendary heterography itself: I AM HODLING
Everybody knows what happened after GameKyuubi made his famous I AM HODLING post -- go read Rizzo's or Coindesk's if you want to know what they say the story is.

Better yet, read Gamekyuubi's original post. Here's a screenshot of it. It may be the best piece of writing on the internet. It's worth the few minutes it takes to read it. So read it.

I still get chills when I read it. But, as with any great piece of writing, it's important to interrogate more than the text. We must ask

What about the psychology of the individual?

Let us begin then with what was going through GameKyuubi's mind when he "type d that tyitle" the first time.

From the text, you may surmise that the bitcoin price was experiencing some amount of volatility. Since reaching an all time high of $1132 in late November, the price of bitcoin had collapsed by more than half to $519. Nevertheless, GameKyuubi wasn't selling and his reasons are made very clear in his post (I'm a bad trader), but I'm curious about the specific phrase he wanted to use: why did GameKyuubi attempt to write "I AM HOLDING" instead of "I'M NOT SELLING" or "I AM DONE DAY TRADING" (as he says a few hours later after waking up from being passed out on the floor) or perhaps even the slightly retro "HANG IN THERE"?

First, it is important to realize that by today's standards, GameKyuubi was a total generate shitcoiner. He liked Datacoin, he liked Stablecoin, and he liked Doge. But then again, pretty much everybody was a shitcoiner back then. GameKyuubi was happy to call out scams, and had no trouble seeing Ripple for what it is. All of this in the 10 days leading up to the famous I AM HODLING post.

The point is, GameKyuubi clearly didn't mind trading. So what prompted the shift to the hold-mindset we see him develop while his GF is out at a lesbian bar?

For the longest time

Two days before GameKyuubi made his famous post, he posted this link to a YouTube video: It's a music video and you should listen to the whole thing before reading further.

Zhou Tonged and Zhou Tong

Hard to go wrong with Billy Joel, and the musical duo that is known as Zhou Tonged certainly knew what they were doing.

Zhou Tonged was formed in early 2012, taking their name from the infamous founder of Bitcoinica who was known to auto-liquidate margin traders.

In an interesting aside, exactly two months after the musical duo Zhou Tonged came into existence, the real Zhou Tong made a post on BitcoinTalk announcing "I am leaving Bitcoin" -- although, in the post he also says he has a 1000 BTC Casascius coin that he will keep "as a lifetime investment" about which he is "pretty confident that it'll be the best investment ever in my life."

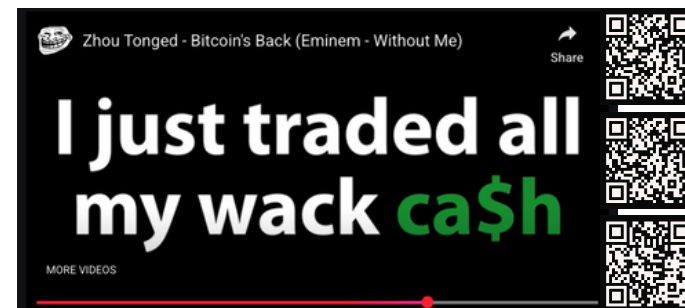

Back to the music group, Zhou Tonged -- in a video AMA from 2014 with the Austin Bitcoin Meetup, Zhou Tonged says that he's a music major who comes from a family of musicians and his unnamed partner in the group does all the video editing and tech. Zhou Tonged says they have been in Bitcoin since "$1 or $2" and as seems to have been the custom at that time, trading was the norm. Their name comes from first hand experience.

You can see the duo perform together in this video of their first (and only?) live performance (at the Bitcoin in the Beltway conference). I really dig these guys. They have enough production value to be enjoyable and yet clearly are just two guys doing this dorky thing. As with Bitcoin-themed movie posters, the niche for Bitcoin-themed music was never going to be large...

We used to be a cryptocurrency. A proper cryptocurrency.

The heading just about covers this section. Skip it if you aren't going to listen to these songs.

Goddamn, I love Bitcoiners.

Zhou Tonged released 12 songs between March of 2012 and April 2016. If you want to listen to the others, go to their YouTube channel.

You won't regret it.

GameKyuubi wasn't the only one holding

Returning to GameKyuubi's state of mind on 18 December 2013. Two days earlier, we know he was listening to Zhou Tonged's Billy Joel cover, Holding (For the longest time).

Although GameKyuubi may have had a more literary bent, I think you can see many of the elements of the I AM HODLING post here: the price will rise and fall, doubters panicked and let their bitcoins go, and of course the refrain I'm just holding for the longest time.

Given that GameKyuubi posted a link to this song days before he made the I AM HODLING post, it's pretty clear that Zhou Tonged was doo-wopping through his mind as he wrote. While it may have been GameKyuubi who fat fingered "HODLING," Zhou Tonged helped to build the holding ethos that made GameKyuubi reach for the word in the first place.